Steel Producers Booked

Well Into First Quarter

"The year 1922 ends with much less than the usual holiday interruptions to ordering and with leading manufacturers committed against production well through the first quarter of 1923," "The Iron Age" to-day will say. "Output is being obtained with difficulty owing to the shortage of men, especially in finishing and shipping departments, and car shortage has been an added obstacle."

"Higher prices for pig iron are based more on higher fuel than on a large demand, though this is of unusual volume for the holiday season."

"The Iron Trade Review" will say: "Some of the larger independent mills have experienced the heaviest business of the year in December. Structural awards received this week amounted to almost 36,000 tons. Sheet, some large mills received new business more than 40 per cent in excess shipments."

The few price advances announced represent practically a withdrawal from the market by the mills making them. Buyers show no fear that they will be forced to cover long at higher prices, and from the producers' standpoint there are abundant indications that the effort is to stabilize the market for the time being at the present levels.
